

Cancer Causes Slow Starvation.

TRENTON, N. J., Feb. 20.—John Lyner died to-day. Death was due to starvation. He suffered from a cancer of the mouth and throat, due to excessive smoking. The cancer became so severe that he could not eat or drink. For four years he had been kept alive with the greatest difficulty. He slowly starved to death.

The New York Times

Published: February 21, 1898

Copyright © The New York Times